

New

gender strategies

for women's inclusion

The EU-funded project WINGS aims to facilitate the social-economic integration of third-country national women in vulnerable situations, including individuals who suffered abuse and trauma.

The model that WINGS will pilot in Belgium, Greece, Italy, and Spain revolves around a three-pronged approach offering integrated language training, psychological support, and job counseling.

The methodology is based on the development of gender- and trauma-sensitive comprehensive integration support programs tailored to the needs of the beneficiaries.

The expected impact

for women

Increased language and soft skills, self-perceived wellbeing, and motivation for 60 beneficiaries who will be helped integrate in the labor market

for employers

Increased opportunities for employers to contribute to an inclusive economy by creating 15 internship or job opportunities for the project beneficiaries in each partner country, and increased employers' awareness towards supporting vulnerable groups

for service providers

Increased understanding and strengthened capacities of victim support organizations to provide needs-based and tailored-made language, psychological, and employment support to their clients
